

Leo was adopted in May 2012 he was just a little over a year old. When I first met Leo I fell in love, he smothered me with kisses. He will smother anyone in kisses that he meets if they will let him. After having Leo for a little over a year I felt 2 lumps on his neck. After a couple days the lumps doubled in size and he was taken right to the vet. The vet did a couple tests and the results came back that my very active 2 year old baby has Lymphoma. The vet referred us to a local specialty hospital, but their oncologist had just resigned and they were in the works of signing another oncologist to a contract. Waiting however was not an option for us, so we were then referred to UPenn Vet. After a few treatments Leo went into remission, but unfortunately the remission did not last as long as the doctors and I hoped. The doctors informed me 2 days before Christmas that Leo's cancer has come back at his check up appointment. Leo is on his 2nd round of Chemo, but you would never know he is sick. He still runs, jumps, snuggles, plays, and loves to go for rides as he did before he was diagnosed. As long as Leo fights, I will do what I can to help him fight. Thank you Paws 4 A Cure for helping Leo and I fight.

Forever grateful,
Mandie & Leo
