“I rescued my Bandit from a shelter that believed he had been abused from his previous owners. After having my eye on him for 4 weeks, I found out he was put on the euthanasia list and I knew it was a sign that I had to save him and give him a place to call home. Now my poor baby started to become lethargic and lying on the bathroom floor. He drinks water non stop and can not seem to hold his urination. When I took him to the vet out of concern, I found out he has developed diabetes. He requires an insulin injection and is on a diet- which he has lost some weight from already. His water intake and urination has not changed however and the next step is to get his fructosamine checked, which is the equivalent to a glucose check.

He is my baby and my companion. All we have is each other. All I want is to give him the treatment he deserves so he can get back to his fun, bouncy self that loves attention and squeak toys. Thank you for any donations you can provide so we can get him on the path to recovery and thank you to Paws 4 A Cure for answering my thoughts and prayers.”
