

“Starry, Starry eyes”

Houdini was adopted from the Royal Oak Animal Shelter when he was small enough to be held in one hand. Ever since he was adopted, he has lived up to his magical namesake with his tendency to hide whenever guests come over, his knack for disappearing and reappearing out of thin air, and his ability to seek and receive the attention of everybody in the room. He will be turning 12 this October, but nobody tell him that; he still acts like a kitten and is very playful with his owners, waking them up at 6:31 am every morning to be fed, and dragging their clothes from one room to another. He was diagnosed with lymphoma two weeks ago, and his vet told his owners that if the cancer is left untreated, he will only have a few weeks left to live, but if it is treated with chemotherapy, his chances of survival look promising. Houdini has many years and many tricks up his sleeve, and would appreciate your assistance in allowing him to live them out.
